VCU Department of Music students
The Founders' Society recognizes benefactors of Virginia Commonwealth University who have made commitments of $100,000 or more to the MCV Foundation, the VCU Foundation, the School of Business Foundation, the School of Engineering Foundation or the university. Tonight, we welcome those who have become members since October 2005.

The design of the Founders' Society Medallion incorporates important architectural elements from VCU. The medallion shows Founders Hall on the Monroe Park Campus and the Egyptian Building on the MCV Campus at approximate compass positions.

The Egyptian Building, constructed in 1845 and designed by Thomas Stuart, represents one of the most perfect examples of Egyptian architecture in the U.S. It is the oldest medical college building in the South and the first building of the Medical College of Virginia. Egyptian architecture was used for the building to celebrate and recognize medicine's Egyptian roots. Today, the building continues to play an active educational role, housing classrooms, lecture halls and offices.

Founders Hall, formerly known as the Saunders-Willard House, served as the original home of Richmond Professional Institute. The house, built in the 1880s by Mr. and Mrs. E.A. Saunders, was later purchased by the Hon. Joseph E. Willard, lieutenant governor of Virginia and U.S. ambassador to Spain, who lived at the residence until 1915. The University Club of Richmond occupied the house until 1925, when it was purchased by the RPI Foundation. The property became the nucleus of RPI, housing offices, classrooms, a library and even a small gymnasium in the converted stable. Founders Hall continued as a classroom and dormitory space until 1980. Currently, it is occupied by VCU administrative offices.

Founders Hall and the Egyptian Building encapsulate the histories of both campuses and are integral parts of today's university. Together, they represent the accomplishments of the past, which have resulted in the prominence of VCU as one of the nation's pre-eminent research universities.

The original design for the Founders' Society Medallion is by R. Daniel Booton.
